RECAP: What are British values?

British values are the things we believe in as a country. These things are split into 4 categories:

1. Democracy
2. The rule of law
3. Individual liberty
4. Mutual respect for and tolerance of those with different faiths and beliefs, and for those without faith.

Democracy

Democracy means 'ruled by the people'. The people in England don't really rule over the land, but if you are a British citizen over 18 years old, you can vote to decide who will be our prime minister, and who will be a part of our government.

This is democracy. We help decide who will rule.

The rule of law

The rule of law is all about making sure we follow the law and people are given a fair trial if they break the law.

Individual liberty

Individual libverty means that we all have the right to be free, and to express ourselves how we want to. If you want long hair, you can. If you want to pierce your ears, you can. If you want to cut all your hair off, you can.

Mutual respect for and tolerance of those with different faiths and beliefs, and for those without faith.

This British value is all about respecting others who believe different things. Some people are Muslim, some are Christian, some people are Hindu, and there are lots of other religions. Some people don't believe in any religion at all. It is important that we respect everyone equally, and we don't discriminate based on what people look like or what they believe.

Design a colourful poster that symbolises one of the British Values.
