What has happened?

How is Rose feeling Why?

The boy was thrown into the back of the lorry. Rose Blanche saw other pale faces in the gloom, when the door banged shut and the lorry drove away in a cloud of diesel fumes.

Rose Blanche was furious at the way they had treated the little boy. Where were they taking him? She followed the lorry right through the town. She was a fast runner; she knew all the short cuts. Winding streets forced the lorry to go slowly.

Should she have followed the boy?

I do

I believe that Rose should not have followed the boys for many reasons that would have risked her safety.

First of all she had no idea of the location the van was heading therefore could have become lost or gone into a restricted location.

Furthermore, Rose saw that the soldiers had used force to get the boy into the truck and witnessed them pointing their guns before. If the soldiers had spotted Rose, what would they do to a girl who was spying on them?

Additionally, Rose was unsure on the reason why the boy was taken so she did not know the full story behind what she witnessed. The boy could have been taken to be punished for something he did or might have been taken in the van to go back to his house 5 miles away. Either way, this would have prevented Rose from going home to her parents.

In addition, Rose did not think about what her parents would say. Her parents would have been extremely cross to hear that Rose had followed armed soldiers.
