Footballer Christian Eriksen collapsed in Denmark's opening Euro 2020 game against Finland last weekend. He was given life-saving treatment on the pitch and was taken to hospital where he's now recovering. Eriksen says he is "fine under the circumstances" and is getting a device called an ICD fitted to help his heart in the future. But the treatment Eriksen received on the pitch - called CPR and a machine called a defibrillator - almost certainly saved his life. Denmark played against Belgium last Thursday (17.06.21) and during the match both teams stopped play to make a tribute to Eriksen and the medical staff who helped him. Read our guide to find out more about the special treatment that helped save him.

Footballer Christian Erikson collapsed during the Denmark Vs Finland match of Euro 2020. His life was saved by life saving treatment on the pitch of CPR and using defibrillator. Eriksen is fine now. Players from Denmark and Belgium stopped play to make a tribute to Eriksen and the medical staff during Denmark's next match.
