LO: To use a range of conjunctions.

By the time they reach their destination, most refugees and migrants have only the clothes they are wearing. Usually, they have no money or anywhere to stay. It's hard to get help when they don't know who to ask, or speak the country's language.
This is why many refugees and migrants end up homeless, or living in tents, caravans or shacks in refugee camps. Although this isn't as comfortable as living in a proper house, there are lots of helpers who hand out food, clothing and medicine to people.

If you've been camping, you probably had lots of fun, but life in refugee camps is very hard. Families have to live together in small spaces, and children don't have their own room, or even their own bed. Some don't have a bed at all.
In some places, it's very hot in the summer and very cold in the winter. There's no electricity or running water, so it's difficult to keep clean. People have to queue for hours for food or medicine, and there are no proper schools.

Refugee camps are home to thousands of people, and some families live there for many years. This is why doctors, nurses, teachers and other volunteers go and help people settle in, build communities and schools, and stay healthy.

Teams of volunteers from charities and government organisations work hard to help people who are living in refugee camps. Some doctors and nurses set up clinics where they can treat people who are ill. Other volunteers help to build shelters, or set up schools for children. Many more people help by collecting clothes or food.
