Friday 12th March
LO: To use conditional conjunctions

LO: To use conjunctions

What is a conditional conjunction?

When is it used?

Give an example.

Conditional conjunctions are subordinate clauses which can be added to a main clause that has a model verb e.g. I might go out. Other model verbs are shall, should, could, will.

Conditional clauses such as 'if the sun comes out' use conditional conjunctions (if, supposing, unless, as long as).

The full sentence says what we wish would happen, or what might have happened, e.g. Unless the rain stops, I will stay indoors.

These sentences are in the conditional tense.

I do

Write a short paragraph using conditional conjunctions to explain the decisions he should make.

As he stared miserably ~~out of his cell bars~~, he suddenly had an idea. If he looked closely, he could see the bunch of keys hanging from the guards pocket.

We do

Continue the paragraph using conditional conjunctions.

As he stared miserably out of his cell bars, he suddenly had an idea. If he looked closely, he could see the bunch of keys hanging from the guards pocket.

You do

Write a short paragraph using conditional conjunctions to explain the decisions he should make.

As he stared miserably out of his cell bars, he suddenly had an idea. If he looked closely, he could see the bunch of keys hanging from the guards pocket.

Group B - Use subordinating conjunctions to write what has happened so far in the story.

Group C - Use conjunctions and, but, so to write what has happened so far in the story.