- To make a sound you have to hit the drum with a stick.
- Once the drum is hit the skin of the drum will vibrate.
- When something vibrates, the particles moves very quickly.
- If you hit the drum harder the particles will move more quickly creating a louder sound.
- The particles in the gases around the drum will also start to vibrate.
- They will travel through the air as sound waves until they reach the ear.
- Sound can travel through solids, liquids and gases.
- The eardrum in the ear vibrates and sends these vibrations to three tiny bones in the ear.

In order to create a sound, first you must hit the drum which will cause the particles to vibrate.
The surrounding particles in the gases will start to vibrate although you can't see this happening.
