Anne Frank

Anne Frank was born in Frankfurt, Germany on 12th June, 1929. Her parents were named Otto and Edith and her elder sister was named Margot. Anne was passionate and vivacious. Growing up, she had many friends and her early life in Germany was like that of any other child: going on family trips to the seaside and riding her bike.

In 1933, Adolf Hitler became the leader of Germany and life for Anne was never the same again. As leader of the Nazi political party, Hitler despised Jewish people. He unfairly blamed them for many of Germany's problems. Jewish people were forced to wear a yellow star and were not allowed to own or run businesses. As a result, many Jewish people left Germany in search of a safer place to live. Anne and her family were Jewish, so they moved to Amsterdam in the Netherlands when she was just four years old.

For a while, life seemed to be safe and normal again. With the outbreak of the Second World War in 1939, Anne's father feared the Nazis would invade the Netherlands. In 1940, that is exactly what happened.

Despite this, Anne happily celebrated her thirteenth birthday and received a red journal that was to become a record of her experiences as a Jew in the Second World War. Anne loved to write and, naming her journal 'Kitty', she began to do so every day. She wrote about her wish for the war to end and other hopes for the future.

Otto Frank began to plan a safe hiding place for his family. He had a secret annexe behind his office where his family could hide away from the Nazis, safe and unseen. After packing what they could, the family moved quickly to the small annexe. They hid away for two years with the help of friends. Anne wrote in 'Kitty' every day.

In total, eight people hid away in the annexe. They had to be very quiet, walking barefoot and hanging heavy curtains at the windows. Anne described the families she lived with and often wrote about how tired she was of living in the cramped space. Just as news about the nearing end of the war reached the Franks, they were betrayed and the Nazis found their hiding place.

In 1944, the families were arrested, split up and sent to concentration camps. Anne was sent with Margot. In 1945, just a month before the end of the war, they died from a disease called typhus. Anne was just fifteen years old.

The only family member to survive was Otto Frank. When he returned to Amsterdam, he found Anne's journal. He decided to publish it, sharing Anne's personal thoughts and sufferings with the world. It has been read all over the world and is translated into sixty-five languages.

As a result, many Jewish people left Germany in search of a safer place to live. Anne and her family were Jewish, so they moved to Amsterdam in the Netherlands when she was just four years old.

The diary of Anne Frank is a well-known real-life story. We have talked her country of birth, Germany before when we looked at the Pied Piper of Hamelin.

Unfortunately, life can sometimes change unexpectedly - think of Jim in Street Child. The new political leader, Adolf Hitler, despised Jewish people and treated them unfairly. As a result of this dreadful, unjust treatment, many Jewish people fled Germany for a better place to live. This situation that the Frank family found themselves in reminds me of the book 'Refugees and Migrants' we have been studying in English.

For a while, life seemed to be safe and normal again. With the outbreak of the Second World War in 1939, Anne's father feared the Nazis would invade the Netherlands. In 1940, that is exactly what happened.

Once again, events turned for the worse again (valleys) for the Frank family, despite moving to the Netherlands ... it wasn't long before the Nazis invaded the Netherlands!

Happily, there were mountains (happier events) in Anne's life when she had her thirteenth birthday and received a journal (diary) to record her inmost thoughts. Often, if we write our thoughts and feelings down in a diary this helps us to deal with our emotions.

Without diarists like Anne and Samuel Pepys (Great Fire of London in 1666), we wouldn't know about the personal side of our history. Many people today write blogs or vlogs, and record their lives on social media. Very people of us put pen to paper and write down our experiences. Why not try it?

In total, eight people hid away in the annexe. They had to be very quiet, walking barefoot and hanging heavy curtains at the windows. Anne described the families she lived with and often wrote about how tired she was of living in the cramped space. Just as news about the nearing end of the war reached the Franks, they were betrayed and the Nazis found their hiding place.

Now we have all recently experienced life in Lockdown where we couldn't live as freely as we usually do. Just imagine having to live and to stay really quiet in a cramped space (alongside another family) for 761 days!

Unfortunately just as the news that World War II was ending, the Frank family were 'betrayed'. Betrayal is when someone you trust lies to you, cheats on you, abuses you, or hurts you by putting their own self-interest first.

I can remember that in the Bible, Judas betrayed Jesus.

It's hard to imagine that Anne's life could get any worse but clearly it did when the two families were split up and sent to concentration camps. Thankfully, Anne was sent with her sister Margot but it's so sad to discover that Anne died at from a common disease in those days called typhus.

When Anne wrote her diary, she never imagined that her father, Otto Frank, would one day publish her journal. What a fantastic legacy she has left us in her diary.

In history, it is really useful to have a timeline of main events in someone's life. These timelines demonstrate a quick way of locating key events in Anne's life. Which timeline do you prefer?

Which events would you put into your own personal time-line?
